

NEW ZEALAND

TRUCKING

DIGITAL EDITION now available in the app stores

Used for everything, driven by everyone

Launched at the Central Districts Field Days in March, Hino Distributors (NZ) Ltd are running a nationwide competition which will see lucky recipients upgrading their licences to either a Class 2 or Class 4.

“The Road Transport Forum has predicted the national truck driver shortage will worsen in 2015,” says Hino NZ’s General Manager, Ray Roberts. “At Hino, we’re all about the transport industry, that includes encouraging the next generation of truck drivers.”

The competition asks entrants why they wish to get their truck licence, offering them the chance to win a truck licence package valued up to $1000. The prize includes logbooks (unit standard), theory, practical training and assessment. The winner of the CD Field Days draw was Louis Nyman, who is keen to get his licence so he can start a business providing a portable rehabilitation facility for horses.

Ray Roberts (left) from Hino and John Marcus (right) from AMS Group congratulate Louis Nyman on winning the Hino licence upgrade. Louis plans to complete his training with AMS group over the next month.

There are two more chances to win. The competition is running online throughout the year, giving everyone in New Zealand the opportunity to join the transport industry. Hino will also provide visitors to their National Fielddays site opportunities to enter. Alongside the driver licence competition, they are also offering the chance to win Playmobil scenes from their interactive radio control truck display. □

For more information check out Hino’s website hino.co.nz